Digital Research and Publishing: A Graduate Student Journal in Digital Cultures

Digital Research and Publishing: A Graduate Student Journal in Digital Cultures publishes graduate student research examining the relationship between new technologies and practices of research and publishing. It is an interdisciplinary journal that draws on a number of fields within the humanities and social sciences. Its concern is critically examining and understanding how new media shape and relate to historical processes of textuality, especially in relation to the everyday lives of those living today in an apparently globalised world defined, in part, by the power of new technologies.

Hosting Approach

- We are the host, not the publisher – they must provide editors, journal managers etc
- Hosting is free, but there is a (one-off) set-up cost for non-Sydney journals
- We assist with set-up and some technical support, but often refer users to PKP Forums or PKP School

Other Services

- Connecting editors with content aggregators (Ebsco, Informit) for indexing, licensing
- Sharing CAL statutory licence payments

Future Plans

- DOIs for Sydney journals – Library will pay the CrossRef costs
- Moving archival content to the DAM if presentation quality is comparable
- Long-term commitment to OJS, but restructure and new UL may change the situation
